In detail

Trained in economics, organisation theory and business strategy with MBA and PhD degrees from the Stanford University Graduate School of Business, David's early career was devoted to setting up business schools in low income countries. He completed his military service in Vietnam, before becoming a Visiting Associate Professor at Harvard University Graduate School of Business. In the late 1970's David left US academia and moved to Southeast Asia, where he lived for fifteen years, serving first as a Ford Foundation project specialist, and later as Asia regional advisor on development management to the US agency for International Development (USAID).

What he offers you

With a leading role in raising public consciousness of the political and institutional consequences of economic globalization, Dr. Korten uses his presentations to also raise consciousness of the expansion of corporate power, at the expense of democracy, equity and the environment. He has become a regular guest on talk radio and television and a renowned international speaker. His publications have now become required reading at Universities around the globe, and his expertise is much in demand.
